Introduction

Pursuant to the Administrative Code, the New York City Department of Transportation (DOT) identifies annually 20 high pedestrian crash locations based upon data provided by the New York State Department of Transportation (NYSDOT) on the number of pedestrians killed or severely injured over a five-year period. Pursuant to the Administrative Code, DOT also recommends steps to be taken for safety enhancements at those locations. This report is based upon data provided by NYSDOT for the five years from 2009 through 2013.

In February 2014, Mayor de Blasio launched his Vision Zero Action Plan – an interagency effort to eliminate traffic fatalities by 2024. As part of the initiative, DOT released five Borough Pedestrian Safety Action Plans in February 2015. These data driven plans thoroughly analyzed the unique conditions of each New York City borough and identified characteristics of pedestrian fatalities and severe injuries within that borough. In addition to rolling out an array of education and enforcement initiatives, the Mayor pledged to implement safety engineering enhancements at 50 intersections and corridors each year. In 2014, the City recorded the fewest pedestrian fatalities, 139 cases, since record keeping began in 1910. The High Pedestrian Crash Location Report is one of the tools DOT is using to identify locations at which to make these engineering enhancements.

DOT also employs other methods to monitor and promptly respond to safety needs including analysis of crash data and continued community outreach. This report is only one element of our Vision Zero work in neighborhoods across the City. To find out more, please visit nyc.gov/visionzero.
